Nana seems a bit reluctant (不情願) here to convey to (向. . .表達) her photographer friend the personal news she carries in her heart. When she tells him the news of her mother's illness, the words seem to leap abruptly from her mouth (由她口中脫口而出). Cooper responds appropriately, pointing out the advantage of optimism (樂觀), and promising that he will pray for her. Nana speaks bravely of her anxiety (焦慮), and sees her mother's illness as an opportunity for her to reflect on (思考) her life and her family.
